Our standard dental cleaning of your pet's teeth includes anesthesia, anesthetic monitoring, ultrasonic scaling of the teeth, routine hand scaling of the sub-gingival pockets, polishing of the teeth, a fluoride treatment, and an antibiotic injection to discourage systemic infections.

Dental cleanings many times reveal that there are many other problems such as heavy sub-gingival tartar, gingival infections, growths, or teeth that have been damage beyond what a normal cleaning will correct. Every effort will be made to correct any disease processes and retain the teeth. In treating some of these problems however, we may be required to remove teeth, treat the gums, extend normal scaling procedures, perform minor surgical procedures, or send medications home to allow the mouth to heal properly.

In allowing a dental cleaning to be done on my pet I also authorize the removal of any teeth or performance of other procedures that, in the judgment of the veterinarian, will improve the health of my pet. I understand that they are not part of the base charge for a dental cleaning and that additional charges will be incurred for these procedures.

- Pre-anesthetic blood work is recommended for all pets prior to any procedure that uses a general anesthesia. This blood work will not prevent complications to anesthesia but may reduce the risk of complications by postponement or change of a procedure, operation, or anesthetic protocol.

All pets over the age of 2 will require age appropriate bloodwork for procedures estimated longer than 15 minutes.

Any pet with medical problems may be required to have appropriate bloodwork to determine if anesthesia is safe.

- With modern anesthetics and procedures your pet is relatively safe in undergoing the procedure it is here for. However, unforeseen complications can always occur. Additional supportive, IV fluids, can be done to improve the safety of your pets anesthesia and surgery. IV fluids will better support the cardiovascular system and reduce stresses on the kidneys and liver.

All pets will have an IV catheter placed for their safety regardless of age for anesthetic procedures

All pets over the age of 7 will require IV fluid support for procedures estimated longer than 15 minutes.

All pets will require IV fluid support for major procedures that are not routine in nature.
